

BROOKLYN FRIENDS 1958

To Joey (Just about the closest buddy I've ever had,)

What I'm about to write will be laconic, sincere, with no circumlocution attached.

Through the two years that we've been the closest of friends I've honestly felt that, despite our differences, we've been a most congenial pair, helping each other out whenever possible (Diana vs. Sue, etc.). The great times we've had together will always be cherished by me.

All I can say now, everything else being discussed through the years, that I hope we can continue being best of friends for as long as possible.

This is the book of our year...

and what it commemorates is the most wonderful and the most exciting year of our lives. It is the most important year we have ever known. We are aware, however, that 1958 does not mark the beginning and the end of time. We are surrounded by reminders that there have been and will be longer-remembered events, that there are things which had their beginning before we were born, and which will continue to endure when we are gone. But we want our year to be remembered; we want a tangible record, something which can become a part, and so make our year a part, of things remembered and enduring . . . and it is for this that we publish this yearbook.

We dedicate this yearbook to ... William J. Meenehan

the celebration of anniversaries, to the recognition of great landmarks in the history of our school. To us as a class, the most recent of these is one of the most important. The year 1958 marks the end of the first five years of service that one man has rendered as our principal. Guided by him, we have experienced a period of revitalization and renewal, not only of our building and the materials with which we work, but also of the tone and the general spirit of our community. Under his close and interested direction, there has been born a new vitality which has become the basic characteristic of a growing and forward-looking institution of education. And we are especially grateful to him for the creation of a double class, which has enabled many of us to become a part of this school. To thank him, and in recognition of his contributions to Brooklyn Friends School, we, the class of 1958, dedicate our yearbook to of activity...

The year 1958 is the centenary of the Brooklyn Friends Meeting House. Those who first sat in quiet meditation within its walls, one hundred years ago, found a source of spiritual enrichment.

The years have passed, but the character of the Meeting House has endured. Its influence has grown to encompass the whole of the school and the student body. Silent and serene, it is the spiritual heart of the school; vital and bustling with the efforts of the students, it is the center of activities at Friends.

Years of work...

and years of play...

Thirty-five years ago, a four-acre vegetable garden, overgrown with tall weeds, was purchased by Brooklyn Friends School. This was transformed into the Friends playing field, where football, soccer, hockey and tennis provided the students with exercise and excitement during spring and fall afternoons.

Later, two frame buildings were erected to house the sports equipment and lockers of the students. These buildings were the forerunner of our present field house, an ivy-covered colonial building. During the twenty years that have passed since its dedication in 1938, it has been the scene of dances, picnics, rallies and many other colorful events in the life of Brooklyn Friends School.

Self-portrait of six kindergarten students:
Stan, Bill, Chris, John, Joanna, and Reg

in single file...

Ninety years have passed since the first class of students completed a year at Brooklyn Friends School. It is impossible for us to recall the faces of the far-distant past. Yet we are aware that each student has left an imprint upon our school. Brooklyn Friends is the sum total of all those who have gone before; of those who are now ready to bid her farewell; and of all the students, young and old, who have shared this wonderful year with us; for Brooklyn Friends School is dedicated to the importance of every single person in the long parade.

Miss Ann Ewing traces around Roy Poses while Elissa Bennett, Michelle Karshan, Billy Muller, Ricky Kronick and Peter Delano watch this beginning of a kindergarten self-portrait.

Mr. William J. Meenaghan
Principal of Brooklyn Friends School

To the Senior Class of 1958 :

Your yearbook recognizes anniversaries—dates that have influenced your school and your environment, the borough of Brooklyn. It is fitting that you should pause to look over these events, for in some measure what you are is related to the anniversaries.

It is not necessary to be a sociologist to know that place rubs off on people. Conversely, it is not necessary to be a historian to know that over the years the past of an institution becomes as much a part of the place as its physical setting. It is about the place that I write this message to you.

Back in 1867, when Brooklyn Friends School was founded, the Society of Friends was probably one of the most independent religious groups in the city. So it was natural that the Society establish a school with strong emphasis upon independence.

The achievement of independence is one of the great thresholds of life. For a student it marks the beginning of Nature's most honorable status—being on your own. It is the time where the perplexities, burdens and joys of a fully realized life come in man-sized packages. It is our hope, our wish, that each of you is strong enough to be independent.

You, the class of 1958, may well be establishing another anniversary, for you are the largest and best class to be graduated from Friends in its ninety-one years. May the class of 1958 be a beautiful best among all the best classes of the B.F.S. family.

Dear Seniors: This year was the bridge . . .

It was the span of time joining two worlds, your Commencement, the end of one existence and the beginning of another; this was the way they said it would be. But to you who lived it, this year was more than an introduction or a finale; it was a thing in itself, absorbing, important, and complete. It was The Great Year, a year to commemorate for its own sake. And for me it was an anniversary too, the tenth year that I have taught at Brooklyn Friends School. In the photographs that I have made for your yearbook, I have tried to picture something of what all this has meant to us, to fix in visible and permanent form some of the teeming life within these walls, something of the wonderful spirit that has pervaded and shaped the days and the years that we have shared. And above all, in the photographs on the pages that follow, I have tried to make time stand still, to give you something that will really endure. The years will go by, as they always must; many of them will grow dim, and some may be forgotten . . . but here is the record of one that can never completely fade. This is the way you were, during a moment of 1958; this, in a certain sense, is the way you will always be. May you at least never lose what was best about this time, what was most worth keeping. And may you remember that our best wishes go with you, always.

Dear Joe,
I'm sorry I didn't sit in the back of
Bio. Lab all year -
I'll miss you
Love,
Tina

Dear Joe,
It's too bad we couldn't have gone to school together. If we had, I'm sure
we would have been fine friends. I wish you the best in life from now till the end. Enjoy College.
an old friend
Jeff Mogelof

Dear Jay,
What I want to say I won't write here & I think you already know.
Our friendship has
without a doubt lighted up my school year & I certainly don't think it will ever
end. That's all I'll say here.
Love
Esther

To my big baby Joe -

Joe,
We've had a long relationship, and
it's been closer
at times and more
distant at other times.
It's always been an honest relationship, though, and that's important. I don't want to sound sentimental, so I'll only say,
in all sincerity, that our friendship, I hope,
will always continue, and always be close, because you're the type of guy I want and need as a friend.
Morty

Best Wishes
Love Mom
